Have a very blessed Mother's Day!
You may have seen the Denver Catholic article this week on the priest assignments taking place this summer. It mentioned that Archbishop Aquila has reassigned me as pastor of St. Thomas More for the next six years. I came to this parish six years ago next month and find it hard to believe that the initial assignment has already run its course. I give thanks to the Lord for the wonderful graces and blessings this community holds, shares and makes present so beautifully. I thank you for your prayerful support and encouragement to me and the other clergy as we strive to fulfill our priestly and diaconal call to serve you in the Lord’s name.

May the next six years bring renewed grace and continue to deepen my awareness of the daily presence of God made manifest within this faith family. As we serve the Lord in our lives, let us always pray for each other.

Next weekend we will begin to bring back limited numbers of the faith community here to the weekend and weekday Masses. Please do not just come and show up, expecting to get into Mass. We need to observe appropriate limits at the various times and settings. To help make the Sunday Masses more available, we will be offering three Masses at both Saturday anticipated Mass times and all Sunday morning and early afternoon times. We will not be offering a Sunday evening Mass for the immediate future. But, all told, we will have 18 Masses available to help make the opportunity more present. We will also return to having two daily Mass times available Monday through Friday mornings. All the Masses will be restricted to just those who are scheduled and have a ticket to attend that particular service. Also, we will continue to live-stream Mass Sundays through Friday for all to participate in from home. Remember, the obligation for attending Sunday Mass is removed for the foreseeable future by your Archbishop, most likely until a vaccine is available.

How do I get a reservation/ticket you ask? I am glad you asked. That is why we have been asking everyone to make sure your parish registration is current, up to date and correct in the ways we can contact you and knowing who all is living in your household. We will be reaching out to parishioners who we know are active and involved here at St. Thomas More. If you currently receive emails such as the parish Flocknotes from us, you know we have, for a while now, been sending out updates and information on what is happening, and what will be taking place.

The only way we really have of connecting with you is if we have your information. When the “stay-at-home” phase began last March, we started calling some of the older parishioners on our data roles. We found many phone numbers no longer in use and thus we had no way of connecting and checking up on them. We have since been regularly asking all to see that your registration is accurate, partly so that when we can bring people back in a limited way, we can do it thoroughly using the parish roles, giving all an equal chance to come to Mass and receive the Eucharist. We will probably be going a couple months before a second wave of invitations are able to be offered, so it is important that we know you are there and interested in attending Mass.

We will be inviting the more senior members of the community to attend a weekday Mass for the time being. That is due to the fact that they are more susceptible to the COVID-19 virus and so we will try to limit their exposure to others who might be out and about more at this point. They are also probably more able to get away during the weekdays and attend.

If you are reading this in the bulletin and are not sure if you are registered, or if your registration is up to date, please go to the parish website (www.stthomasmore.org) and click on the “Join Our Parish” button. This is for you if you have never registered or updated your information if you already are registered.

I know that for most of us, the inability to attend Mass and go to communion has been the most trying aspect of these past several weeks. I hope that as we begin to bring the public back to the sacraments, it will bring a renewed peace and joy to our faith family. God bless you and keep you.

One final note, please be aware that the Archdiocese will ordain a new set of priests next Saturday morning at 10:00AM. Dcn. CJ Mast, who has been here at St. Thomas More parish this past year, will be one of the men ordained. Due to current limits on gatherings, even the priests are not able to go and be present for the ordination celebration, but the event will be livestreamed from the Cathedral for all to watch. You will find information on how to connect at the Archdiocesan website. Please join in and pray for the newly ordained priests.

– Msgr. Tom
Planning For Public Mass at St. Thomas More

We are looking forward to the time you and the rest of our St. Thomas More family can gather again for Mass.

As we plan for this, knowing that attendance will be limited for each Mass time, we need to be able to contact all of our parish members to be sure everyone is included as we enter into the first phase of public Masses.

To be able to contact our parishioners, we are planning to update all of our current registered family’s information. We need your help to make this happen.

Please complete the form on our website (www.stthomasmore.org) under the ‘Join our Parish’ tab. Click on the ‘Current Member Updates’ button and complete the form.

If you are unable to access our website, please call the office at 303.770.1155. Thank you so much!

Happy Mother’s Day

On this Mother’s Day, with much love we remember, honor, thank and pray for all mothers.

God our heavenly Father, you give to each the ability to share your generative love. Bless those women in our lives who mirror your love and bring forth life into this world. Help us to show them our gratitude for the gift of life and the gift of a mother’s love. May our life-giving God continue to bless them and show them His unfailing love. We ask this through Jesus, God’s Son and our brother. Amen.

By Joshua Evans, Ph.D.
Assistant Professor of Health Care Ethics
at Regis University

In the recent weeks we have seen a beautiful flowering of support for the caregivers in our health care institutions. They are suffering, walking with Jesus on the way to Calvary every day at the bedside. They stand in a long line of saintly examples like Fr. Pedro Arrupe, SJ. He was in Hiroshima when the atomic bomb was dropped in 1945. He miraculously survived. As a priest with medical training, he spent countless hours attending to the sick and comforting and blessing the dying. Through courage and the grace of God he was able to be a witness to Christ’s love even in the midst of immense tragedy.

Saintly examples are crucial at this moment. So, too, is the moral teaching of the Church. A number of ethical issues have arisen in the recent weeks. I am a Catholic theologian and ethicist, and below I offer some thoughts on how Catholic thinking can help us maintain our moral bearings in this crisis.

The most prominent ethical question has been this: how should we allocate scarce resources such as ventilators and Intensive Care Unit (ICU) beds? Too many states and countries were tragically unprepared for the onslaught of patients in such a short amount of time, and we exacerbated the issue when too many people refused to take the crisis seriously.

When it comes to scarce resources, we should turn to the concept of distributive justice. As St. Thomas Aquinas teaches, this form of justice “distributes common goods proportionately.” In the case of limited health care resources, “proportionately” means according to how the “goods” – ventilators, organs for transplant, etc. – relate to the persons who need them. Those who stand to benefit the most from the good in question take the highest priority. This is not a question of one life being more valuable than another. Rather, it is about responsibly using our resources. Determining need and benefit is complex, and the teams who would make these decisions bear quite an unenviable burden. Yet there is no way around the problem. Imprudent use of scarce resources would itself be a moral failure.

Some outside of Colorado have advocated policies that seem to categorically exclude patients from treatment based fundamentally on age or the perceived value of a patient’s life. This is both simplistic and morally bankrupt. Age in the health care setting is primarily relevant when it stands in as an imperfect shorthand for health. Furthermore, every patient’s life has immense value. The federal government recently reminded the states that there shall be no unjust discrimination even in a crisis situation. Catholics should applaud this, because unjust discrimination in any situation displeases God and conflicts with the natural moral law that points us to happiness.
Colorado’s guidance document, on the other hand, seems to avoid this pernicious discrimination. Called the “Crisis Standards of Care,” it will only be implemented in what it terms “an extreme situation.” Learning from some of the errors of other states and countries, it explicitly prohibits unjust discrimination. The guidance does not categorically exclude anyone from treatment based on age or disability. It does, however, use age as one of a number of factors in a complex scoring system used to predict the likely benefit of aggressive treatment, such as a ventilator, for patients who have complicating health factors (“comorbidities”). It also uses age – under the heading of “Life Years Saved” – as a potential factor in “tie-breaker” situations.

People will disagree about whether the uses of age in the Colorado guidance are morally appropriate. Most importantly, we should remember that moral principles are not suspended in a crisis situation. Difficult ethical moments are when we need moral wisdom the most. God-willing – and with fervent prayers – we will not see anything near this “extreme situation” in Colorado.

There is a related moral issue in this crisis that would benefit from Catholic wisdom. The media has cruelly and needlessly framed triage decision-making as “choosing who lives and who dies.” These decisions are traumatic enough for our caregivers, and we should not compound the suffering by falsely suggesting that anyone is making choices in favor of death.

Two important concepts from the Catholic tradition can help us avoid this misleading way of framing these difficult decisions. First, the Catholic tradition demands that we be accurate and precise when specifying moral actions. Generalizations and euphemisms are never sufficient when using our consciences. In allocating scarce resources, no one is “choosing who lives and who dies.” They are, rather, choosing how to best use the limited resources available to them. Death is never a goal or choice of good health care, even in a crisis.

Second, the Catholic tradition has given us the essential concept of double effect. This concept relies on the crucial distinction between two kinds of effects of our actions: on the one hand, foreseen-but-unintended effects, and, on the other hand, effects for which we are responsible. We often do good things that bring with them unavoidable negative side-effects. This is morally acceptable and even praiseworthy as long as the act itself is not always wrong, we do not desire the negative effect, the negative effect is not essential to achieving the good effect, and the good effect outweighs the negative effect. The concept of double effect can help us be sure that, when done appropriately, the allocation of scarce resources such as ventilators can be done in a morally upright way, even when we foresee that some patients will not survive.

Finally, this crisis should prompt us to ask bigger questions about the moral foundations of our society. Our world has been dramatically confronted with questions of human dignity, which sadly become most poignant only in the face of tragedy. We are also confronted with questions of justice and the common good. While we believe that human beings are fundamentally good, we know all too well that we are fallen and that rationality goes astray much too easily. Sadly, our moral debates tend to highlight just how fallen we are from God’s hopes for humanity.

We would do well to revisit Saint Pope John Paul II’s encyclical Evangelium Vitae. In that encyclical – and in its earlier companion, Veritatis Splendor – the great pope reminds us of the richness, beauty, and necessity of Catholic morality. The Catholic tradition has a robust and comprehensive moral vision that helps us ground our moral claims in reason enlightened by faith. Anyone who says we should keep our Catholic principles out of health care – or out of society altogether – is naive about the inherent limitations of a secularized and godless morality. For too long we have attempted to build a society with a fragile moral edifice. This crisis might allow us to see more clearly that religious buttresses have long been holding up that otherwise perilous secular structure. Now is the time to deepen our moral foundations.
